

Their Emotional Needs Don't Take the Summer Off.

When the school year ends, the classrooms get quiet.
But our students' lives don't.

The challenges many of our students face—family instability, loneliness, anxiety, difficult relationships, financial stress, and uncertainty about the future—don't pause for summer break.

That's why our teachers and advocates continue showing up.

Throughout the summer... students still text.

They still call.

They still ask for help, advice, encouragement, prayer, and support.

Sometimes they simply need a trusted adult to remind them they are valued and not alone.

For many students, those connections are lifelines.

A monthly gift helps make those relationships possible year-round.

While classes may not be in session right now... hope, encouragement, and care continue.

Because our students' emotional needs don't take the summer off... and neither do we.

For over 40 years, the Denver Street School has been a place where students discover hope, purpose, and a future they never thought possible.

And it happens because of people like you.

Your generosity meets students at the very beginning—when hope feels far away—and helps carry them all the way to moments like this.
